A Drop in the Ocean Geoffrey Pettit

We live on the land but are drawn to the sea; some of us in fear, some in hope, many for gain and still more simply for the mystery of it. Our modern world would not exist without the many thousands, even millions of ordinary men and women who have given up their lives to the sea and are out there yet, lost forever in this greatest of mass graves. The call of the sea is difficult to ignore and this is one man's story of answering that call. Sailing the world in small boats is commonplace today and even single-handing an ocean hardly warrants a comment. This is not a book about records or even about great artistry in the circus-ring of modern sailing, but rather a record of an ordinary man's desire to go and see for himself what the ocean is like, and learn to appreciate, as only a witness can, the sacrifices of those that have gone before.
