And this formidable task may be accomplished in two ways. That is to say, a writer may have no other ambition than to become an echo of the average mind and to be a sort of public phonograph, which is so adjusted that it will reproduce every sound that enters into it. Or a writer may be bold enough to think his own thoughts, and be master in his own intellectual household, and see the world through the lens of his own imagination. In the first case we have hardly what may be called Literature, or at least we have art in its lowest and most imitative form. The artist has become only a sounding-board. But in the second case we have that new creative force of which the best literature is always full. In the affairs of the mind, therefore, there works a law which is ubiquitous in human things, namely, that a thing and its imitations or caricature exist simultaneously. It is so in marble, jewelry, bonnets, and furs, and certainly it is so also in the products of the imagination. I hope I shall not be guilty of injustice or of exaggeration if I say that the conditions under..hich modern imaginative work is produced are such as to enc urage the creation not of the reality, but of the counterfeit. Indeed the literary form of this sort of unconscious caricature threatens to drive the genuine article out of the market. Like everything else literature i...
