Microsoft in 1980, only about 30 years ago, had 38 employees and sales of $8 million. Google, started by two Stanford students in 1998, has a market cap of $173 billion today, more than three times the value of GM, a 107 year old "traditional" company. Apple, Amazon and many others are entrepreneurial successes, but 3 out of 5 entrepreneurial companies fail within 3 years and many do poorly. Changing the game, creating risk and opportunity for all players are rapidly morphing markets, technology innovation and global forces.

Emerging companies creating new businesses; traditional companies holding on to survive; today's business thinking challenged at all levels; and most struggling to understand what is happening and where we are heading. Worm on a Chopstick ("Chopstick") offers perspectives and strategies helping address today's challenges and opportunities.
