An Experienced Interior Designer Helps You Avoid or Postpone the Expense of Elder Care Facilities

The need to care for an aging parent or other loved one is becoming more common every day. Care facilities are very expensive, so delaying or eliminating that expense is very worthwhile.

Modifying either their home or yours to accommodate their needs can be expensive. This book contains tips, some of which are very inexpensive, that can make the process more manageable.

The authors have been there, done that. Not only for their clients, but for five of their own parents and step-parents. Here they share the lessons learned, along with numerous tips and references to help make this transition more manageable in terms of safety, money, and emotional stress on all involved.
